Bengaluru: Extentia has set up a development centre in Bengaluru, its first outside its corporate headquarters in Pune. The firm that counts NYU School of Medicine among its clients, will offer solutions in cloud, mobile and design services out of the its Bengaluru centre.

Extentia will hire 20 people to begin with. It employs a total of 430 people, including 60 in the Salesforce centre of excellence. It has sales offices in the US, UK, Australia, Singapore and Germany. As a Salesforce consulting partner, it offers a spectrum of services including app development, third party integration and implementation of Heroku, a platform as a service that enables developers to build, run and operate applications in the cloud.

Umeed Kothavala, co-founder and CEO of the firm, said the company's capabilities are across tech, consulting and innovation. "We invest upfront and build prototypes in AI, wearable, IoT, augmented reality and virtual reality that is then piloted in client projects. We co-develop solutions for clients," he said.
